Nazi Elite Guard Ex-Officer, 64, Gets 15 Years At Hard Labor; Provided Cattle Cars To Take 300,000 Jews To Death Camps

Karl Frederick Wolff, the highest-ranking Nazi officer yet to be tried by a West German court, was convicted on a charge that he had had a role in the slaughter of Jews. He was sentenced to fifteen years at hard labor, writes Philip Shabecoff, in the New York Times. Wolff, a former SS, or Elite Guard, major general and the war-time liaison man between Heinrich Himmler and Hitler, was found by a Munich court to have contributed to the murder of 300,000 Jews during World War II.

Originally accused of complicity in the slayings, Wolff was found guilty on a lesser charge of having helped to provide railroad cars that carried the 300,000 Jews to Nazi extermination camps.

The Munich prosecutor had asked for life imprisonment, the severest penalty possible under West German law.

Tight security measures were taken at the court following an anonymous telephone call from someone speaking broken German who said that an attempt would be made to free Wolff if he were convicted.

Extra police were detailed to guard the white-haired ex-Nazi and a new route was taken to and from the courthouse.

Throughout the trial, which began July 13, the 64-year-old defendant insisted that he was ignorant of the Nazi program to exterminate the Jews.

However, the president of the Munich court said that Wolff, who was an intimate friend with both Hitler and Himmler, was well aware of their murder plans.

Wolff had been kept under arrest by the Allied authorities for about four years after World War II. However, because of his role in helping to arrange the surrender of German troops in northern Italy in 1945, says the New York Times, he escaped prosecution at the Nuremberg war crimes trials of the top Nazi leaders.

While serving as chief SS officer in Italy, he participated in clandestine meetings with Allen W. Dulles and other Allied agents to help arrange an early surrender of German troops. He also was said to have entered negotiations with Pope Pius XII.

During his trial Wolff insisted that he had helped to save the lives of thousands of Allied troops through these negotiations. He also attempted to convince the court that his cooperation with the Allies showed he was not deeply committed to the Nazi cause.

The court rejected this contention. The court president said that in his judgment Wolff was a deep believer in the Nazi ideology and that he had accepted plans for the obliteration of the Jews "under the idea that he had to fulfill a historic task, setting back all qualms of conscience."

Wolff's defense counsel announced that he would appeal the verdict on the ground that there was "no actual evidence" of the former SS general's guilt.

The two-and-one-half years Wolff spent in custody while awaiting trial will be deducted from the fifteen-year sentence.

He previously was sentenced to a four-year prison term in 1949 by a de-Nazification tribunal in Hamburg. However, the sentence was suspended because of his confinement by the Allies, says the New York Times. Wolff, who fought with a Hessian guards regiment in World War I and joined the SS in the early 1930's, was living as a businessman in West Germany before his latest arrest.

Wolff was ashen-faced but standing ramrod-stiff as he heard the verdict in a Munich court, says the New York Herald Tribune reporter at Bonn, Myron Kandel.

The prosecution had demanded life imprisonment, West Germany's highest penalty, for Wolff for complicity in the deportation of the 300,000 Jews to the death camps of Treblinka, Sobiber, and Belsen.

The court, however, found him guilty on a lesser charge of aiding and abetting in the murders, rather than complicity, "because he held no power of command of his own and could not give any directives." Until he was transferred to Italy in 1943, Wolff headed Heinrich Himmler's personal staff.

Judge Erich Mannhardt wound up the ten-week trial with a three-and-one-half-hour explanation of the court's ruling. He rejected Wolff's defense that he had not known of the Nazi program of exterminating the Jews.

Wolff, he asserted, was Himmler's highest confidant and was "closely familiar with the thoughts of Hitler and Himmler, and approved of them."

He "helped in a crime unparalleled in history" and "strove to execute Himmler's orders as correctly as possible," Judge Mannhardt added, says the New York Herald Tribune. The judge said that in sentencing Wolff, the court had taken into consideration his actions after his transfer to Italy, where he became SS commander in September, 1943.

Without Hitler's knowledge, Wolff negotiated with Allen Dulles, head of the U.S. Office of Strategic Services in Switzerland, for the surrender of German forces in Italy to the Western Allies.

Because of these activities, Wolff was not indicted at the Nuremberg war crimes trial and was permitted to wear his general's uniform while testifying for the prosecution.

He was later sentenced to four years imprisonment by a Hamburg de-Nazification court, but served only one week of that sentence.

He became a wealthy advertising agent, and was living in a lakeside Bavarian villa when newly available documents pointed to his involvement in providing the railroad cattle cars used to carry the Warsaw Jews to their death.

Wolff, a judge's son who joined a Hessian Guards regiment in World War I, was a self-described passionate soldier and nationalist. After he failed in business in the economic collapse of 1931, he became a member of the SS. He explained at the start of his trial, says the New York Herald Tribune, that he had sought to introduce into the SS the spirit of his old guards regiment.

Carl Frederick Wolff replied with a drawn-out "no" when asked by the president of an earlier court

Great Clown, Pantomimist, Harpist, Harpo Was The Soul Of The Act

Harpo Marx, the blond-wigged, non-speaking member of the Marx Brothers team, died in New York in Mount Sinai Hospital. He would have been seventy-one years old in November.

A hospital official said Mr. Marx died after heart surgery.

Mr. Marx, whose given name was Arthur, had been in semi-retirement for five years. In January, 1963, he announced that he was retiring completely, says the New York Times. The harp-playing comedian was the second of the theatrical brothers to die. Chico, the piano player died in 1961. The surviving brothers are Gummo, Zeppo, and Groucho.

Mr. Marx leaves also his wife, the former actress, Susan Fleming, to whom he was married for twenty-eight years, and four adopted children.

A honking horn, facial expressions, and gestures were Mr. Marx's only mode of communication as a performer on the stage and in films.

A battered plug hat on his frizzled mop hair, a cretinous grimace on his innocent face, and his baggy pants and oversize raincoat filled with everything from axe handles to zebra skins, Harpo Marx kept audiences laughing for fifty years.

His trademark was his harp, which he played well, and his silence, which was funnier, sweeter, and more eloquent than most comedians' noisiest chatter.

The cigar-chewing Groucho was the star of the team, but it was Harpo, tooting his horn while in pursuit of an attracting girl, who always stopped to steal the show with insight.

He was a great pantomimist who specialized in direct action. In a moment of peril he could be relied upon to produce from his huge coat pockets some device or tool with which to save the day — many times a scissors to straighten the hem of a woman's skirt or to cut phone lines.

The result was that the Marx Brothers became the most celebrated brother act in the history of motion pictures. Their wild chaotic world of improvisational humor was distinctly their own, says the New York Times. Among the films they made were "The Cocoanuts," "Animal Crackers," "Duck Soup" and "A Night at the Opera." Though they were produced in the nineteen-thirties, they are still popular and occasionally make the rounds of the art houses.

With his brothers Julius (Groucho), Leonard (Chico), Milton (Gummo), and Herbert (Zeppo), Harpo learned his profession through a childhood in vaudeville.

The team rose the hard way — starting as a musical act called the Six Musical Mascots (their mother was the sixth). Then followed the Three (later Four) Nightingales, until they reached a vaudevillian's peak — playing the Palace in 1918.

The brothers were the sons of an Alsatian tailor, Sam Marx, and Minna Palmer (Schoenberg), a German musician whose brother, Al Sheean, was a member of the well-known comedy act of Gallagher and Sheean.

Harpo was born in the Yorkville section of New York in a tenement on East 93rd Street on November 23, 1893. He attended Public School 88, but never got beyond the second grade.

After their success in the Palace, Gummo dropped out. But the team continued, traveling the vaudeville circuit for the next six years and adding to their popularity at every stop.

In 1924, the brothers made their Broadway debut with "I'll Say She Is," a revue that brought them praise from Alexander Woollcott, who wrote:

"This man is a great clown. Harpo is the funniest man I have ever seen on the stage." The critic took a liking to Harpo, and introduced him to the crowd of writers, actors, wits, and wags that frequented the Algonquin Hotel, says the New York Times. An ideal listener, Harpo became a favorite.

The team followed their stage success with "The Cocoanuts," a satire of the Florida land boom, and in 1928 with "Animal Crackers." By that time, sound had arrived in motion pictures and the team made one of the first talking pictures from their show "The Cocoanuts," says the New York Times. It was a smashing success. Others soon followed.

In 1936, after a long courtship, Harpo married Susan Fleming, an actress who had the lead in a movie called "Million Dollar Legs."

Besides performing in films, Harpo made frequent concert tours. His act consisted of clowning combined with some excellent solos on the harp.

Zeppo dropped out of the team in the late nineteen-thirties to become an agent. Chico and Groucho remained with Harpo, and the three went on to new zany heights, starring also in such films as "A Day at the Races," "At the Circus," "Go West," "Monkey Business," "Horsefeathers," "A Night in Casablanca," "Room Service" and "The Big Store."

In 1941, Harpo broke his silence on the stage by appearing in a summer production of "The Man Who Came to Dinner." He played the role of Banjo, speaking a line, but also honking his horns and chasing girls about the stage.

The Marx Brothers made their last movie, "Love Happy," in 1949. Groucho turned to radio as a quizmaster, says the New York Times, while Chico and Harpo took to the night-club route.

The Marx Brothers had theatrical antecedents, although their parents were not of the stage. The elder Marxes, Samuel and Minna Schoenberg Marx, had emigrated to the United States from Alsace and Germany, met and wed, says the New York Herald Tribune. Her father had been a wandering magician, and her mother, a harpist, accompanied his troupe. Her brother became famous in vaudeville as Al Shean, of the song-and-dance comedy team of Gallagher and Shean.

Mr. Marx had little interest in a theatrical career for his five sons — Milton was the fifth — but Mrs. Marx had plenty to spare, and she persisted in preparing them for the stage. First to make it was Chico, with his piano, and, briefly, Harpo with his two tunes.

Mrs. Marx wangled a job for Groucho with the Gus Edwards troupe as a singer, and later he toured the country with the LeRoy Trio. There was an interruption when his childish soprano changed, and then he was back on stage.

Then, Mrs. Marx organized a trio — Groucho a tenor and a girl — as the Three Nightingales. The act was a protracted flop, and

Italian Rabbi, Friend Of Pope John, Was An Initiator Of Debate On Jews

Rabbi Leone Leoni, aged sixty-seven years, the retired Chief Rabbi of Venice who was one of those credited with persuading the late Pope John XXIII to introduce the Papal "Declaration of the Church's Attitude Toward the Jews" at the Second Vatican (Ecumenical) Council, says the New York Herald Tribune, died in Rome after an operation. It was learned in New York.

His death came as the Second Vatican (Ecumenical) Council had completed debate on declarations regarding religious liberty and the Jews, to be attached to the schema (project) on Christian unity which Pope John considered to be the most important task before the delegates.

Rabbi Leoni retired in 1962 after a life that included not only a long friendship with Pope John but also leadership in Italian Jewish culture, arrest and imprisonment for anti-Fascism, and a place on a list of hostages marked for death. He spent two years underground during the last phases of World War II.

Born to an old Sephardic family in Verona, Rabbi Leoni was ordained in 1926 and was a rabbi in Ferrara for 32 years during a period when Ferrara was the most important Italian Jewish cultural center. After the war, Ferrara was rebuilt under his direction.

Appointed Chief Rabbi of Venice in 1952, Rabbi Leoni spent the last 10 years of his rabbinate reorganizing the Jewish community life there, establishing kindergarten and primary schools, rededicating the ritual bath, and home for the aged, founding a Jewish museum and setting up other cultural, social, charitable and interfaith organizations.

Rabbi Leoni was responsible for shipping temple religious objects of defunct communities to Israel, among them the appurtenances of the Temple of Conegliano Veneto which now form a part of the Italian Temple in Jerusalem.

Rabbi Leoni was violently anti-Fascist, although his cousin was Mayor of Ferrara during the Fascist regime. The rabbi was imprisoned in 1942, released and then put at the top of a list of hostages to be seized and shot in retaliation for the blowing up of German military installations by partisans, says the New York Herald Tribune. He escaped with his family and went underground.

Surviving are his wife, the former Gemma Ravenna; a son, Dr. Aron L. Leoni, of Milan; a daughter, Mrs. Bruna Herzfeld, of New York; two sisters and four brothers.

Thomas Rodgie McLagan, O.B.E., will be guest speaker at the annual open house reception of the corporations division of the Federation of Jewish Community Services, on October 19, at 5:30 p.m., at the Montefiore Club. Mr. McLagan is a governor of McGill University. He has been associated with the McGill Fund, the Montreal Joint Hospital Campaign of several years ago, and Salvation Army campaigns. Theodore Lande, chairman of the division, said: "We are asking for increased support from local business firms in the community this year to help to meet the budgetary increases which our agencies face. In 1964 for the first time in many years, the Jewish Federation had to budget for a deficit of some $50,000 because we didn't reach our goal in last year's campaign. For the coming year we are seeking $980,000 to meet the increased budgetary requirements of our ten constituent agencies. This is $149,000 more than was raised last year. These funds are required to help to meet the operating costs of expanded services in new buildings such as the Maimonides Hospital and Home for the Aged and the Jewish Convalescent Hospital, and the relocation of other agencies such as the Baron de Hirsch Institute and Jewish Child Welfare Bureau, and Neighbourhood House, and Heral Health Service Centre.

OVERSEAS RELIEF OR LOCAL NEEDS: IS THERE A PRIORITY FOR YOUR CAMPAIGN DOLLARS?

This is a choice I for one would never care to make — to make such a choice could even be considered an evil. If, as I said earlier, Judaism is a sense of kinship, how then can we choose between relatives?

If you will think about this question for a moment, you will see it as if you were asked to choose between two of your own children.

To choose Israel would be to turn your back on Montreal which in turn would destroy Israel; because Israel needs a strong Montreal Jewry. To choose Montreal would be to turn your back on Israel and this in time would destroy Montreal, because Jewish life is only as strong as its weakest link.

Throughout the world Jewish life must be seen as one organic whole, really as one child.

I have pointed out that we have fallen below meeting our real needs in the past several years. This year we desperately need $4,385,000 — more if we can raise it. Great as the achievement was in 1963, we cannot look upon four million dollars as a plateau. To do so would be a real tragedy when we need so much more.

The answer to our problem is not to choose between local and overseas needs. The only possible answer to our dilemma is to raise more money — and we can do it easily! Practically every gift in our community, with the possible exception of a relatively few, could be doubled or in many cases tripled or even quadrupled without creating a single major problem for the givers. If we were to face ourselves honestly, we would admit that this is true.

But giving has been based on pattern, on habit, on tradition, and very often this tradition has been to give not as much, but sometimes, perhaps too often, as little as we can. Whatever most have given, it has not been based on solid reality. But whatever it has been, we tend to look on this figure as having some magical quality, not subject to change.

This is why we haven't reached our goal. This is why some people have to raise questions of choice between Montreal and overseas.

The answer for us, and we cannot avoid facing up to the moment of truth, is to increase our pledges by one hundred percent, or if that is not possible by fifty percent. And with that simple act — and it is only money — our dilemma of choice would be resolved.

Someone said that the answer is not to give until it hurts. The answer is to give until it stops hurting — until we no longer have to make painful choices between Montreal and overseas.

Montreal Jews have been working and giving for many years on the principle that there is nothing finer we can do — nothing more worthy or more wonderful than helping human beings. The difference required to do that job right is within our capacity.

I hope you agree that for your own self-respect and dignity and for that sense of worthiness to which we and our children aspire, we must rise to the grandeur and goodness that lies within everyone of us. Then and only then, can we consider that we have measured up to our heritage as Jews, a heritage that extends justice and mercy to all Jews in need wherever they may be.

The 1965 Pontiac Has Been Redesigned For The New Massive Look

The new 1965 Pontiacs have been entirely redesigned to point up the low-riding "big car" styling traditional with Pontiac, General Motors of Canada announced.

A massive look has been given to the front and rear profiles. There are 40 models available in Canada, in 11 series.

Up front, the traditional Pontiac twin-grille is now deeper and combines with a new full wrap-around front bumper to emphasize the extra width and give a massive effect.

Pontiac's dynamic new sweptback roofline and new curved side windows, have sweeping lines of glass and metal flowing back to a sturdy rear design.

The wheel track is 2.2 inches wider in the front and 3.1 inches greater in the rear. Pontiac's all-new chassis incorporates a new perimeter frame with torque box construction, a new Full Coil suspension system and wider-tread tires to provide improved roadability and handling.

Hub caps and wheel trim covers have been redesigned. There is a concealed centre gas filler for sedans and coupes. The radiator support panel is rubber mounted now; and the windshield and rear windows are adhesively sealed.

Inside, there is a new instrument panel and cluster and front doors are larger for easier entry. Seventeen exterior colours, fifteen of them new, are available along with a wide variety of trims; and there is a new optional Sport Top material for Sports Coupes and Sport Sedans.

The 1965 Pontiac Catalina, Star Chief, Bonneville and Grand Prix lines have all-new styling, also emphasizing a longer, lower silhouette. The distinctive Pontiac deep twin-grille and wrap-around bumper are common to most of the wide variety of models and give them an impressive styling start.

A lower sill height and horizontal sculptured body lines along the length of the car highlight the 1965 long, low styling. A new larger windshield sets off the dramatic sweep of the roofline.

Increased length and distinctive Pontiac front-end styling emphasizes the eye-appeal of up-front massive styling in the "big car"

HARPO WAS THE SOUL OF THE ACT

from time to time the personnel changed, with Harpo quitting a job as a bellhop to join at a Coney Island Theater.

The story was that his mother had to push him out from the wings, and he was too frightened to speak. Even after he got over this problem, he still was a bad risk on spoken lines, and that's how his role as the mute comedian came into being. He never got farther than the second grade in school.

The Three Nightingales had become four, then, with Mrs. Marx and an aunt, became the Six Mascots. Finally, Milton and Chico were recruited, and presently the Four Marx Brothers began to rise as an institution, says the New York Herald Tribune. Milton quit the stage after World War I, and Zeppo took his place.

They were a united family of indomitable spirit, spurred on by their mother, who would never accept defeat. Alexander Woollcott wrote of her in his obituary in the New Yorker that she was among the few people he had ever met with a quality of greatness, says the London Times. She not only gave birth to five comedians but she also invented them.

It may be that the historians of the film and the psychiatrists of the entertainment world have attached too much significance to the work of the Marx Brothers, a splendid team of clowns who combined individualism and originality with admirable teamwork and complete professionalism. Yet in retrospect they can also be seen as the forerunners of that mood of rebellion which is so much a feature of modern entertainment.

They, too, attacked the established order and the spirit of conformity with immense gusto, but they were never spiteful in the process. They graduated from poverty without resentment and their comedy was never poisoned by bitterness.

Harpo (the nickname was acquired during a poker game) was the wild-eyed lunatic in a wig who played the harp, blew on a motor horn, chewed thermometers, and never spoke. J. B. Priestley once described him as "the unconscious at play, the ordinary citizen in dreams and with the lid off."

Certainly the Marx Brothers never suffered from any inhibitions on the screen. They followed the first impulse which came into their heads, and the first impulse which usually came into the head of either Harpo or Groucho was to chase the nearest blonde. This gave no offence, says the London Times. It was not sex rearing its ugly head but simply the uninhibited male in pursuit of what was, in every sense of the phrase, fair game.

Groucho's hallmark was his verbal assault. Harpo, deprived of speech, seemed to inhabit a different sphere altogether. His eyes had a far away look, if also one of near lunacy. Groucho had his feet planted firmly on the ground, but Harpo dwelt in the clouds. He was a wanderer from the world of fancy.

The brothers started their career vaudeville act called The Four Nightingales — an unfortunate title since Gummo and Groucho were only moderate vocalists and Harpo could not sing at all. Later they became the Marx Brothers, and went on tour with a schoolroom act in which Groucho played the master and Harpo was a moronic pupil, with a tousel wig improvised out of some old rope. Thus was his film character born.

In the 1920s they became stars of Broadway and later the cinema, and their film career need not be described in detail here. They became a part of the Hollywood world of the 1930s, guided and encouraged by the most talented of the early film producers, the late Irving Thalberg, who after their failure in "Duck Soup" took them under his wing at MGM.

But their era was relatively short. Perhaps the pre-war world was not yet ready for an attack on conformity, says the London Times, and anyway Thalberg died young. But their place in film history is secure. They outraged convention with abandon, but always without malice.

The "silent" Marx Brother was perhaps the least appreciative description of Harpo. For he provided the zany comedy team with an unusual and incomparable eloquence of pantomime, writes the New York Times critic, Bosley Crowther. With his huge, fuzzy, pink wig, large, bright eyes and broad, moon face, Harpo relied on rapid gestures, beaming expressions, beeping horns, and high-pitched mouth whistles to say what few could articulate in words.

Groucho was the noise-maker. He made with the gags, splattering the jokes and the grotesque comments all over in a verbal cascade. Chico, while less dynamic, was also adroit with words, tossing off humorous non sequitors in tortured Italian dialect. Zeppo, the youngest brother, was a straight man while he was with the act. But Harpo said nothing — and, in doing so, he often said more than all the rest.

The Marx Brothers' great success on the screen bridged the transition from silent to talking comedy. They arrived on the wing from vaudeville and the stage in the early 1930's to fill a peculiar vacuum that had been caused by the onrush of sound.

Where the great and popular silent comedians — Charlie Chaplin, Buster Keaton, Harold Lloyd — developed their humor with sight gags and pliant pantomime that revealed their separate characteristics, the first new comics who tried to be funny with sound were almost like stand-up comedians, laboring vainly to project humor with words. The sight gags were awkwardly downgraded. So was the artful pantomime. Dialogue was substituted, and it was terrible.

Then came the zany Marx Brothers, who were neither silent-film comedians nor talking automatons of sound. They were an utterly crazy combination of nondescript characters, using verbal as well as physical slapstick and wisecracks mixed with pantomime, says the New York Times. Each in his way represented a distinctly different comedy type, thrown together in a strange amalgam. Harpo was the soul of the act.

Obviously, he was the closest to the great comedians of silent films. In a way, he was esthetically related to Charlie Chaplin's Little Tramp. Harpo was full of mischief (as the Little Tramp certainly was), moving about with his boisterous playmates, chasing blondes and honking his auto horn, but he was also inevitably reflective of a tender poignancy. Being "mute," the heart of his nature and of his unspoken affliction came out through his eyes.

While Groucho and Chico were concerned with the elaborate flip-flops of their plots, Harpo was having fun. He was always wise to their manoeuvers, and would often offer an assist or a miraculously inspired suggestion to help the monkey business along.

But invariably at some point in the scramble, Harpo and the pace would slow down and he would withdraw to the comfort of his harp. Then he would play sweet music. Love and bliss would shine in his eyes. And the pathos of being a cheerful misfit and a buffoon to maniacs would be revealed.

There was no common sense in the character. It was a whimsey, a hare-brained caricature. But it sweetly suggested life's derangements and something of its haunting mystery, says the New York Times. Unfortunately, his kind of expression is no longer seen in films.

NAZI ELITE GUARD EX-OFFICER, 64, GETS 15 YEARS AT HARD LABOR

if he pleaded guilty, reports the New York Times. The case of the former Nazi officer, who was a businessman before his arrest two years ago, has drawn nation-wide attention because of his unusual role toward the end of the war.

As brought out in proceedings in the Palace of Justice at Munich, Wolff succeeded in establishing contact with Allied secret services in Switzerland in the spring of 1945 to discuss surrender terms for German troops in northern Italy.

His clandestine meetings with Allen W. Dulles, of U.S. Wartime Office of Strategic Services, and others, brought about the capitulation of the Germans on May 2, 1945. Mr. Dulles later became the director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

"I take personal credit for having saved tens of thousands of lives, both of German and Allied troops, by bringing the war to a quicker end," Wolff asserted.

The 400-page indictment did not deal with this part of Wolff's long career as an intimate of Himmler, Hitler, and other leads. Prepared over a period of two years, the document says that Wolff "consciously and willingly" helped other Nazi leaders to "settle" the Jewish question.

The indictment charged that Wolff, as a representative in the hierarchy of Nazi leaders, also participated, along with Himmler, in the liquidation of at least one hundred persons, most of them Jews, in Minsk in August, 1941.

Wolff's testimony touched on practically everything but the charges. Retelling his life history, he said he joined the Nazi party as well as the SS in the summer of 1931.

When he said he was brought up to love his fatherland and follow humanitarian ideals, the judge cut him off by commenting sharply: "It sounds like a bad joke when you mention the SS and humanitarianism in one breath." The former general replied:

"I always try to live up to my ideals."

Wolff said Hitler was present when a number of Elite Guard leaders took the oath of the Nazi party in 1931. He quoted Hitler as having said then that he would never issue orders that were illegal or run counter to a man's conscience, reports the New York Times. This brought jeers from the spectators' gallery. Wolff's fight "peace feeler" in Italy, he told the court, came in May, 1945. "It failed," he said, "and literally [illegible] I [illegible] to be [illegible] representative of the [illegible]

OVERSEAS RELIEF OR LOCAL NEEDS: IS THERE A PRIORITY FOR YOUR CAMPAIGN DOLLARS?

By Alvin Bronstein, executive director of the Combined Jewish Appeal and Federation of Jewish Community Services, of Montreal, in "Your Community"

What is the difference between a Jew who is overseas-minded and one who is local-minded? Whatever the difference is, it is important to point out that what we have in common vastly outweighs our differences, whatever they may be.

As we think about our agencies, we certainly recognize that they do not discriminate between one or another type of Jew. They are available to serve all who need them regardless of their special interests within the Jewish community.

We have a Jewish Immigrant Aid Services, a Jewish Child Welfare Bureau of Baron de Hirsch; we have a Maimonides Hospital and Home for the Aged, a Jewish General Hospital, a Canadian Jewish Congress, a Federation of Jewish Community Services and of course a Combined Jewish Appeal.

Our involvement with any or all of these, as well as many others, is without regard to whether we belong to this or that part of the total Jewish community. We have, thanks to our Joint Campaign for Combined Jewish Appeal and United Israel Appeal, not many Jewish communities, but truly one great Jewish community in Montreal.

There really is no answer to the question of whether Judaism is a religion or a culture. The real answer goes beyond both. Judaism is something much more than both. It is a feeling of kinship between Jew and Jew. And this kinship goes beyond any particular branch of Judaism.

It reveals itself in all its many splendored qualities when a total Jewish community comes together to meet its needs, to measure up to its responsibilities and to work together for things on which all can agree.

Our total community working together is known as the Joint Campaign for Combined Jewish Appeal and United Israel Appeal. Its aim is to be the responsible voice of the Jewish community in meeting Jewish needs, to bring planning and coordination into our far-flung activities, and to be the instrument through which enough money is raised to meet our responsibilities.

What are these responsibilities which we must meet? Our responsibilities are to maintain the community agencies which our people need, to support the national and international organizations that work on behalf of our people, and to support Israel in its continuing struggle to save and rebuild lives. There are at least 45 agencies, and many more if we stop to count all other minor agencies subsidized by major ones — which, to a greater or lesser extent, look to us for the wherewithal for the support of their programs.

Each year, we have a fairly good idea of what we will need to do this and what will be required of our community. What was needed last year, at a bare minimum, was $4,125,000.

Actually, that was less than the bare minimum because in order to make ends meet, the Combined Jewish Appeal had to cut over $300,000 from agency requests. But our community leaders want to be realistic — they adopt a conservative attitude when deciding upon campaign goals.

This year, again being realistic, they adopted the goal of $4,385,000 to try to catch up with last year's needs. However, there were many who felt that in view of the unmet needs at home and abroad, the goal should have been much higher, even if unrealistic, in order to dramatize for the whole community the immensity of the needs on all fronts.

As successful as our campaigns have been in the past, you should know, however, that we have consistently failed to reach our established goals, realistic as they have been. Because we have failed to reach our goals, we have been doing what any family would do in the face of financial crisis. We have cut down on expenses — on agency programs.

We have said that certain human needs would have to go unmet. The crucial question has always been "where shall we cut? The work of our local agencies? Overseas and Israeli relief? With not enough money to meet our needs, where is our first responsibility? At home or overseas?"

This question seems to be on the minds of a number of people in the community. Those who place Israel as our first responsibility point out that Israel has saved more than a million lives and in addition has made great strides in building a civilization.

I have visited Israel on many occasions and have seen the almost unbelievable progress being made there. We have been given an unprecedented opportunity to share in the support of this magnificant achievement. We should certainly not be found wanting in this respect.

Since 1961, there has been a great surge in the Jewish refugee movement abroad. The pressure on North African Jews worsened as it did for those in Iron Curtain countries. At the same time these countries did allow Jews to escape in large numbers. Immigration into Israel has continued to be heavy and for 1964, it may go even higher. At the same time, virtually the entire Jewish population of Algeria, over 100,000, has fled to France.

The story of Jewish suffering is not new to our contributors, but it is very real to the Jew who is going through it.

To escape penniless, to find yourself without a job and crowded with as many as 12 people into an attic room in Paris, or a one and a half room semi-permanent asbestos house in Israel, to see the lives of your children being ruined is asking too much of people who have already suffered greatly.

Tens of thousands of refugee Jews in France and other countries of Europe need our help to build their lives anew. In Israel at least 250,000 immigrants taken in since 1948 still need help, all because we have not raised enough in the past. This year many thousands are expected while the gates are still open, all of them needing much care.

This year we must want to do more, for there is a point beyond which people should not be asked to suffer, and our fellow Jews have been pushed to that point.

Those who favor Israel over local needs say on occasion that the Joint Campaign needs the impact of overseas relief to make our campaign more successful. Those who favor local needs will say that we have a primary responsibility to our fellow citizens right here at home. They state, and rightfully so, that we must remain strong as a local Jewish community or everything, including Israel, will be lost.

They remind us of the vital work being done by Baron de Hirsch Institute, by the Jewish Community Camps, by Maimonides, by Mount Sinai, by Bnai Brith Hillel Foundation, by JIAS, by Canadian Jewish Congress, which works to protect our very right to live secure and dignified lives as Jews, by the Jewish General Hospital, by the Jewish Convalescent Hospital and all the other agencies in Federation and CJA.

If we turn our backs upon our own, we shall have lost far more than we could ever hope to gain.

A community, like a family, must deal with its own problems before dealing with those of others. To keep our community alive and thriving, we must give it proper sustenance. We have to help our children to grow up as healthy citizens. We have to help our families solve their problems.

We have to help our people to stay healthy or, if sickness attacks, to see to it that they get proper medical and nursing care. We have to work in harmony with the large community to care for our aged, for our handicapped, for our mentally retarded, for our emotionally sick.

These responsibilities are ours and we cannot avoid them. Surely you must be proud of what our local and national agencies have accomplished year by year. You have seen our Jewish community welded close together, Jews of all walks of life working shoulder to shoulder.

You've seen the results in the new building of the Maimonides Hospital and Home for the Aged, in the new addition to the Mount Sinai Sanatorium. You will see them in the new Jewish Convalescent Hospital, in the additions to the Jewish General Hospital. You will see them in the new Baron de Hirsch quarters, and soon you will see them in new quarters for Herzl Health Service Centre and Neighbourhood House.

But if you go into these buildings or into the Jewish Vocational Service or the Sheltered Workshop, or into any of the agencies, you would be thrilled and moved at what we are doing day after day for the people of our city.

But here too, the dollar problem has hurt our people. There is psychiatric care needed where it isn't being provided. There is more money needed for rehabilitative work for the aged and handicapped — there is more money needed because of inflation just to keep on doing what we are doing now, to say nothing of doing more.

There is more money needed to do those things which are now on the drawing board in our social planning committee, in our coordinating committee for services to the exceptional and in our advisory committee on services for the aged. All of these things are "bread and butter" needs to take proper care of people in our own community. This can't be done unless we raise more money.

Thus, both sides of the issue of local versus overseas needs present cogent arguments. If there is enough money to go around, there is no issue. For the past several years, however, with needs on both fronts growing by leaps and bounds, the crisis has been creeping up on us and forces us to face the issues squarely — should we choose Montreal or overseas?
